The 2011 Future Scholars

Jenny Roemer (Colorado State University, supported by Jerry Vaske) grew up in Sarasota, Florida before moving to Colorado to attend Colorado State University in 2006. After completing her undergraduate degree in 2010, Jenny remained at CSU to pursue her master's degree in Human Dimensions of Natural Resources. Her current research interests address the emotional dimension of human-wildlife interactions, and she is also studying visitor satisfaction using data collected from various National Park Service (NPS) units. During the summer, Jenny has worked as an interpretive ranger for the NPS at Grand Teton National Park in Wyoming.

Emily Pomeranz (Oregon State, supported by Mark Needham): Emily received her B.S. in Recreation Resource Management and History from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. She is currently working on her M.S. in the Department of Forest Ecosystems and Society at OSU where her thesis research explores the attitudes and perceptions of commercial guides and outfitters, government agency personnel, and local residents toward voluntary collaborative codes of conduct and standards for tourism management in the Tracy Arm-Fords Terror Wilderness in southeast Alaska. In the future she would like to further study collaboration as a managerial tool for addressing recreation and tourism issues faced by gateway and natural resource-dependent communities.
